A new poll released Tuesday showed President Donald Trump's approval rating among voters who said they plan to cast a ballot for him in the 2020 presidential election has fallen to 41% approval, his lowest point in the new survey. The Marist poll released Tuesday found 40% of voters said they were likely to vote for Trump, compared to 44% who said they were likely to vote for the president's Democratic opponent, former Vice President Joe Biden. Twelve percent of voters said they were unsure which candidate they'd vote for. Trump lost support among supporters of both major political parties, the poll found. Only 25% of Democrats said they were likely to vote for him, compared to 71% who said they supported Biden and 18% who said they were unsure about which candidate to support. Among Republicans, 35% said they'd vote for Trump, compared to 59% of Republicans who said they were likely to vote for Biden. Twelve percent of Republicans said they were unsure which candidate to support. Trump is the first sitting president to face re-election in decades, and his popularity among voters could be a key factor in the 2020 election. Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) and former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg were the only other candidates included in the poll who received double-digit support. Among voters who said they were likely to cast a ballot for Trump, the poll found 49% said they approve of how he is handling his job as president, compared to 43% who said they disapprove. Among the 40% who said they planned to vote for Biden, a third said they approve of how he was handling his job as president, while a quarter disapproved. Fewer than one in four of voters who said they were likely to vote for one of the two other Democrats in the race, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) or Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.), said they approved of how he was handling his job as president. Among voters who said they were likely to support Biden, just 39% said they approved of how he was handling his job as

I want to have a method that throws a NotImplementedError when this class is instantiated. This is my code: import sys class Foo: def printExceptions(self): print >> sys.stderr, "printExceptions() called" print >>

sys.stderr, " printExceptions() called" raise NotImplementedError() # Call the superclass's method f = Foo() f.printExceptions() # Call our own method f.printExceptions() # Don't call our method f.printExceptions() This is what i got:
```

Traceback (most recent call last): File
"exception.py", line 27, in f.printExceptions()
File "exception.py", line 18, in printExceptions raise NotImplementedError()

NotImplementedError So the question is why the forward slash? Why is that so? A: This is due to PEP 8. The forward slash is a common convention. We use it to denote that a given line of code should be treated as a comment. "# comment" is the same as "#" In your example, the forward slash is used to denote that the current line is not intended to be part of the Python code, and f30f4ceada
